The Picnic

Murky Dismal and Lurky sat in The Pits talking. "The Sprites are having a picnic today," Murky Dismal grumbled. "Go out to the meadow and bring them back here. We'll put an end to their fun!" Lurky look confused. "How will I do that?" "I don't care how you do it!" Murky Dismal shouted angrily. "Just do it!" Lurky hung his head and shuffled off. "Boy," he mumbled, "Murky Dismal sure is mean!" When Lurky reached the meadow, the sprites were frolicking and dancing. "They're sure having a good time," he thought. "I guess I better get to work." He reached in his pocket and pulled out a flute. "I'll play a tune and make them follow me to The Pits. That'll work!" Lurky blew on the flute. A terrible sound came out! He tried again. It was awful! The sprites looked up and covered their ears. "It's that posky Lurky!" yelled Twink. "He thinks he's going to charm us with that flute! Ha! Ha!" The sprites ignored Lurky and went on with their fun. "I know," Lurky said to himself. "I'll offer them the ice cream I have in my sack. Then, when they're eating, I'll catch them and take them home!" Lurky went down to the picnic. "Want some ice cream?" he hollered. He opened the container and waved it in front of them. The sprites roiled on the ground laughing. "Look!" Twink sprite snickered. "It's all melted!" All the sprites were chuckling to themselves.
